

QUARTERLY UPDATE SEPTEMBER 2011
About the Portfolio

The objective of the Ethical Portfolio is to outperform its benchmark, the S&P/ASX 300 Industrials Accumulation Index (Industrials Accum), over rolling three year periods. The portfolio seeks to benefit from investing in primarily large capitalisation Australian shares in an ethical manner over at least three to five years and is for investors who accept the risk of price fluctuations.

Portfolio Strategy

TPPM employs van Eyk's three stage process to evaluate and rank each company in the S&P/ASX 300 Index. Firstly, van Eyk evaluates the quality measures under the categories of growth, stability, financial condition, competitive advantage, and outlook. Secondly, van Eyk classifies each stock into one of six general categories. This classification process takes into account not only the growth potential of the company but also the quality attributes – a more robust approach than simply classing a stock as value or growth on the basis of Price to Earnings Ratio or Price to Book Value. Finally, van Eyk values each stock based on the strategies and methodologies expounded by four of history's greatest investment practitioners, in van Eyk's opinion. The universe of eligible companies has to have no direct involvement in gaming, tobacco, weapons or uranium mining; achieve an environment rating of three or better (as rated by Corporate Monitor); and a social and governance rating of two or better (as rated by Corporate Monitor). Within this universe, the portfolio is not managed in terms of market capitalisation or correlation to the benchmark; rather, it seeks stock specific returns.

Designed for investors who...

- Seek to benefit from investing in large capitalisation Australian shares over at least 3 to 5 years;
- Accept the risk of price fluctuations; and
- Prefer lower portfolio turnover (approximately 30% per year) for tax-effective performance.

^ 14 August 2006

Past performance is no indicator of future performance. Long term performance returns show the potential volatility of returns over time. The value of investments and the income from them can fall as well as rise and is not guaranteed.

You may not get back the amount originally invested. Fluctuation may be particularly marked in the case of a higher volatility fund and the value of an investment may fall suddenly and substantially.

Model portfolio composition and performance have been based on theoretical tracking of the model portfolio and are gross of fees and do not take tax positions into account. Please note, actual portfolios may not perform in the same manner as the model depicted in this document, depending on [the nature of] your personal Portfolio and any customisations.

Rounding used in the presentation of data may result in minor variations.

Market Outlook

For the quarter ending September 30 2011, world markets suffered a mini crash as concerns over the European debt crisis escalated and further talk of a double dip recession saw risk appetite take a sharp turn for the worse. The S&P/ASX300 Index lost -13.06%, the US S&P 500 slumped -14.3%, the Euro Stoxx crashed -22.07% and the China Composite fell -14.59%.

Within the Australian market, industry sector contributions to the benchmark index indicated investors' continuing defensive positioning as per the previous quarter, albeit on a larger scale. The Telco sector was the only area in the black, with all others in strongly negative territory. The Materials and Energy sectors were the worst performers with falls of 19.2 % and 17.8% respectively.

Key technical support levels were breached in most markets over the period, although at around current levels we are seeing a period of consolidation. For example, while the ASX 300 hit a low of around 3850 in late September, post the quarter's end we have had a sharp bounce to 4250 at the time of writing. (+10.4%).

In our previous quarterly note we pointed out that our market was on the cheap side of fair value at around 4400, with some risk at that level as consensus earnings continue to be get trimmed and the macro picture becomes cloudier. However, at below 4000 the market was clearly very cheap and pricing in very significant risks to both company earnings and the macro picture at large. Having said that, given the instability in Europe, and the US it seems likely that volatility will remain for some time. There is also an argument that, given the current state of affairs in global markets, there seems little reason for any significant expansion in the short term of the market's PE ratio to historical averages of around 14.5 times.. One possible catalyst for a reasonable bounce is the potential for the Reserve Bank to cut interest rates. Compared to other central banks the RBA does have ample ammunition. Indeed, recent market speculation that the bank will act sooner rather than later has increased. The concurrent fall in the Australian dollar that would result from rate cuts would also be a positive given the higher than expected currency over the past few quarters has provided many challenges on the company earnings front. Nonetheless, we see this ongoing volatility as providing opportunities for investors to position themselves in quality stocks. While a three month view requires more of a trading mentality and a strong risk appetite, on a three year view there appears to be some very good value and strong yields on offer.

Moving on to the broader themes in our portfolio strategy: we are neutral on the banks. Soft credit growth and strong competition are key headwinds, while there are also rising concerns over Australia's inflated residential property market. However the bank sector does have solid franked yields and unchallenging valuations.

We maintain across the board exposure to commodities, albeit not overweight in a significant way. While world economic growth is slowing and commodity markets have corrected, the three key drivers for the sector remain in place, namely emerging market demand, lax fiscal and monetary policy (creating excess liquidity and negative real interest rates) and demand for quality resources assets. Corporate activity remains a feature, with several M&A actions occurring during the quarter. The possibility of the US Federal Reserve introducing further measures (QE3?) also cannot be ruled out given the ongoing weakness of the US economic recovery, which would likely see a new flood of money into risk assets. We also remain overweight gold stocks as a necessary hedge against monetary instability, which we expect for the foreseeable future.

With regard to the industrials, we retain a preference for those companies exposed to the strong capital spend in the resources and energy sectors, while we remain very cautious on the consumer discretionary area. The healthcare sector remains attractive, offering a mix of defensive and growth attributes.

The key risks have changed little over the last few quarters and will be with us for some time: namely, the precarious fiscal position of the Eurozone and the USA and the ongoing efforts (or lack thereof) to bring sufficient relief to the situation.

In reality this will need not only combined fiscal and monetary policy initiatives but also plenty of time to allow the deleveraging process to progress in a reasonably orderly fashion and avoid any sudden shocks to the system, also known as a “Lehman moment”.
